Mr. Nansen and His Proposed New Home.

The important news comes to the surface that Fridtjof Nansen, the eminent Arctic explorer, lecturer and author, is going to build a house on the jumping-off place of Northern Norway, and there settle down for the rest of his days. Having failed to discover the Pole, but succeeded in raking in a goodly fortune in telling large and enthusiastic audiences about that failure, Nansen has decided to spend the rest of his days looking northward, in hopes, doubtless, that the Pole will some day take it into its head to discover him. If the Pole is a gentleman it will not disappoint the lean and lank explorer.

Mr. Nansen deserves a home on the surging icebergs if he wants it. He deserves all the cold stored wealths he desires, and I hope his ice man will not make himself disagreeable when the pole-hunter pulls up stakes and treks northward, to finally locate where ice is as cheap all the year around as it was in Cincinnati last week. The house he contemplates building will doubtless be a magnificent one. It will probably be a regular Aurora Borealis of a homestead, in fact, with the Northern Lights Company furnishing him his illumination. Then, too, talk of the possibilities of a new seal skin sacque every two weeks for Mrs. Nansen if she wants it! It might be some for anyone else but Nansen, but Mr. Nansen knows there is no better company in the world than himself—for himself—and he will employ his time in looking out for the coming of the North Pole and looking into a block ice mirror. Nansen likes work, and will help build the house himself. I can imagine him now, dressed in Jagger's Patent Indestructible Underwear, and well lined with "Lalib's Extract of Beef," saving cheerily away on great chunks of congealed Arctic Ocean, or fashioning them into building blocks, while beneath his breath he sings to himself: "He never cared to wander from his own icy side!"

Fridtjof, old man, here's looking at you! May you enjoy your future frapped existence as much as we enjoyed your book.—E. J. Appleton in Commercial Tribune.

A Preacher Among the People.

VALENTINE'S DAY.

Happening to step into a room where a number of young people were busily engaged in making and addressing valentines, I was prompted to make some inquiry concerning the origin of Valentine's Day and the interesting custom that attends it. "Brand's Popular Antiquities" gave me the most complete account of the day that I was able to find; but it was not entirely satisfactory. He quotes Wheatley who said St. Valentine "was a man of most admirable parts, and so famous for his love and charity that the custom of choosing valentines upon his festival took its rise from thence." Upon this statement Brand comments as follows: "I know not how my readers will be satisfied with this learned writer's explanation. He has given us no premises, in my opinion, from which we can draw any such conclusions. Were not all the saints supposed to be famous for their love and charity? Surely it does not mean that we should understand the word love here as implying gallantry!"

Johnson's Universal Cyclopedia makes the statement that, "The custom of sending valentines, sentimental or comic love messages, is a very ancient one. Some tell us that on this day the birds select their mates; others trace the custom to the Roman Lupercalia when similar practices were observed. Traces of the custom have been detected among the observances of the northern pagans of Europe."

If this is true it is not at all probable that the tradition ascribing the origin of the interesting custom that attends Valentine's Day to a commemoration of the loving and the charitable disposition of St. Valentine indicates its true origin.

Francis Douce, an English antiquarian, says that, "to abolish the heathenish superstitious custom of boys drawing the names of girls, in honor of their goddess, Februa Juno, on the 15th of February, several zealous pastors substituted the names of saints in billets given on that day."

It seems evident that St. Valentine's Day is the result of an effort to Christianize a heathen custom the real origin of which is lost in the "mists of antiquity."

But however obscure its origin, the day is widely observed and has had a place in literature for years. Anent the idea that birds choose their mates on the fourteenth of February, Chaucer wrote, "For this was seynt Valentine's day, when every bird cometh there to chese his make."

In the Hesperides of Robert Herrick, an English poet, who was born in 1591, there is to be found the following verse:

"Oft have I heard both youth and virgins say,
Birds choose their mates and couple too, this day;
But by their flight, I never can divine
When I shall couple with my valentine."

Herrick's experience should serve as a warning to over diffident young men. Instead of cultivating the affections of some worthy damsel, he devoted too much time trying to divine from the flight of the birds when he should couple with his valentine, and so died unmarried. In his "Travels in England" Misson relates the following: "On the eve of the 14th of February, St. Valentine's Day, a time when all living nature inclines to couple, the young folks in England and Scotland too, by an ancient custom, celebrate a little festival that tends to the same end. An equal number of maids and bachelors get together, each writes their true or some feigned name upon separate billets, which they roll up and draw by way of lots, the maids taking the men's billets, and the men the maids'; so that each of the young men lights upon a girl he calls his valentine and each of the girls upon a young man which she calls her's. By this means each has two valentines; but the man sticks faster to the valentine that has fallen to him, than the valentine to whom he is fallen. Fortune having thus divided the company into so many couples, the valentines give balls and treats to their mistresses, wear their billets several days upon their bosoms or sleeves, and this little sport often ends in love. This ceremony is practiced differently in different countries, and according to the freedom or severity of Madam Valentine. There is another kind of valentine, which is the first young man or woman that chance throws in your way on the street or elsewhere on that day."

No doubt John Gay had this latter conception in mind when he wrote: "Last Valentine, the day when birds of kind
Their paramours with mutual chirpings find,
I early rose, just at the break of day,
Before the sun had chased the stars away;
A-field I went, amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine (for so should housewives do),
There first I spied, and the first swain we see,
In spite of fortune, shall our true love be."
The following very interesting species of divination is taken from the Connoisseur: "Last Friday was Valentine's Day, and the night before I got five lay-leaves, and pinned four of them to the four corners of my pillow, and the fifth to the middle; and then, if I dreamt of my sweetheart, Betty said we would be married before the year was out. But, to make sure, I boiled an egg hard, and took out the yolk and filled it with salt, and when I went to bed, eat it shell and all, without speaking or drinking after it. We also wrote our lovers names on bits of paper and rolled them up in clay and put them into water, and the first that rose up was to be our valentine. Would you think it? Mr. Blossom was my man. I lay a-bed and shut my eyes all the morning till he came to our house; for I would not have seen another man for all the world."

One cannot help hoping such persistence was rewarded and that Mr. Blossom proved to be altogether worthy of his well-salted and persevering admirer.

When she meets the king and queen in the castle, Shakespeare makes Ophelia say to the fratricidal ruler of Denmark:

"Good morrow, 'tis Saint Valentine's Day,
All the morning betime,
And I a maid to your window,
To be your Valentine."

And in the Midsummer Night's Dream, Demetrius, Lysander, Hermia and Helena, starting up at the sound of horns and shouts, are addressed thus by Theseus:

"Good morrow, friends, St. Valentine is past,
Begin these wood-brinds but to couple now!"

Back in 1708 an English poet wrote: "Why Valentine's day to choose a mistress and our freedom lose."

It is true when a couple mate for life there is a loss of certain kind of freedom that was once entirely legitimate. As to the bride,

"She must no more a-maying,
Or by rude buds divine
Who'll be her valentine."

Nor must the groom forget that it was he who stood at the altar and solemnly promised that, forsaking all others, he would cleave to her only so long as they both shall live. And if the mating is wisely considered and well seasoned with true love the gain to both is immeasurably greater than the loss. For such as they, St. Valentine's Day is never attended with a flood of vain regrets. ALFRED.

Oil Craze Strikes Massillon.
Massillon, O., Feb. 17.—The oil craze has reached Massillon and land is being leased in every direction. One company, the Home Gas, Oil and Coal Co., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000. The company will purchase its own machinery and will commence drilling as soon as possible. Another company is being formed and a boom is pending. About ten years ago several holes were drilled in and about Massillon and gas or oil was struck each time, but was shut off by a strong flow of salt water shortly after. Experts claim they can control the water, and as Massillon is located on the Venango belt, they predict a good find.

Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup cures the most stubborn croup, colds and lung affections. Even incipient consumption has been successfully cured by this marvelous remedy. Sufferers will obtain relief after a few doses.
